The Panic Button App turns your phone into a panic button, giving you access to emergency and support services 24/7.
Your mobile phone has evolved into a phone, a camera, a computer and much more. Now you can use it to protect your family.

The Panic Button App turns your phone into a panic button, giving you access to emergency and support services 24/7. The Panic Button App is available on Android and iOS.

Our 5 services are aimed at catering for any kind of emergency thinkable, from serious incidents like missing persons, accidents and medical problems, to more common emergencies like getting lost or locking your keys in your car. Our overall aim is to provide you with a “Big Brother” to support you to the end, whatever your emergency.

When will you use these services? On a daily basis.

The consumer’s critical reliance on our services is underscored by the experience of the founder of The Panic Button App Deon Venter:

“After being stuck next to the road for 4 hours, the idea of a user friendly, GPS driven Panic Button came to me. Although I knew I had been subscribed to “roadside assistance” through either my insurance or a credit card or other account, my experience turned out to be a nightmare.

Firstly, I didn’t have an idea of whom to call. I Google’d my insurance company’s number and after about seven calls, I got through to the emergency call centre.

Although they were efficient and immediately dispatched roadside assistance services, my ordeal was far from over.

I was unable to provide an exact address and it took the assist guys another 2 hours to find me.

I tried to determine our own GPS location from my mobile phone – more than a challenge I would say! The format of the GPS co-ordinates was strange to the assist people and we ended up trying to find a GPS converter on the internet.

What a mess! Luckily we weren’t in imminent danger and didn’t experience some form of medical or other emergency – that would have been the end of us. Why couldn’t we just push a button on our phone that would do all the work for us?”
